May Thucydides, Recalled to life among lis, close his page Ere come the Pestilence, ere come the shame Of impotent and Syracusan war! Lately (how strange the vision!) o er my sleep War stole, in bandages untinged with wounds, Wheezing and limping on fat nurse s arm To take a draught of air before the tent, And, for each step too fast or wide, rebuked. Peace stood with folded arms nor ventured near, But Scorn ran closer, and a shout went up From north and south above the Euxine wave. No. 222. THE DESCENT OF OKPHEUS The shell assuaged his sorrow: thee he sang, Sweet wife! thee with him on the shore alone, At rising dawn, at parting day, sang thee. The mouths of Tsenarus, the gates of Dis, Groves dark with dread, he entered; he approacht The Manes and their awful...
