Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In Enough of Us: Why We Should Think Twice Before Making Children, authors Cheryl and Ellis Levinson present their controversial arguments in a study that explores the choice to remain childfree and the ramifications of choosing to procreate, making the case that procreating is a high-stakes gamble that puts children and the entire planet at risk. Cheryl and Ellis argue that having children is the most selfish decision that otherwise moral people make. In Enough of Us, they provide evidence to support their claims that the risks to children and the adults they become are higher than most people imagine. They believe that the human population wreaks havoc upon the Earth because, as they say, enough of us already exist. An excerpt from Enough of Us Around the world, hundreds of millions of children suffer. Birth defects, abusive or inadequate parenting, genetic predisposition, environmental pollution, poor nutrition, civil upheaval, and an almost endless litany of sources of suffering stand in the shadows waiting to inflict their misery on potential victims. When tragedy strikes and parents cry out, Why did this happen to my child? or, Why did it happen to me? the answer really begins with: You gambled by creating a life. When people become involved in high-stakes gambling, huge losses may ensue. Another of Cheryl and Ellis goals with Enough of Us is to provide support to couples who choose not to have children, a decision that they believe is often viewed as strange. We would like to raise awareness of the wisdom of, and advantages to, not producing children, says Cheryl. We want to inspire dialogue that opens up this subject for wide consideration. About the...
