There are those who simulate friendship and act the role of Ruth in outward pantomime, but are strangers to genuine devotion. Damon and Pythias, David and Jonathan are characters that cannot die because the world admires the holy ties that bound their hearts in indissoluble wedlock. Friendship like Ruth s is no rope of sand, but a golden leash that holds in storm and sunshine. Shakespeare says: If friends thou hait and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel. Love makes life worth living. We live to love. Affection bows its head in the shadow of death and clings to the darling ones until laid to rest in God s acre. Affection plants the flower of hope on the new-made mound and through misty tears follows the faces of the loved spirits as they fade away...
