Excerpt: . t j work of Reformation; it is likewise evident enough, that this cannot be attained to without Catechising and Teaching the People to read. General Discourses from the Pulpit, Execution of penal Laws, and the like Methods, will signify little, as long as the Minds of Men are not prepared, by proper Instructions, to receive just Ideas of the Truth and Principles of our Holy Religion, with as much of the Power and Impressions of it as, by Divine Grace, may be fastened upon them; without which there can be no solid Piety. Serious Men in the Ministry have experienced, and complained much of ity that without Catechising (which is not very practicable, while the People cannot read) Preaching is in a manner lost and thrown away upon them; which I could exemplify (if You can excuse it, Sir) from what was related to me some time ago by a Clergyman of considerable Note, and more than common Diligence in his Function. He told me, he had studied to frame his Sermons for several Years in the plainest Language he was able; and being called to a sick Man, of good Sense in his Business, who desired to receive the Sacrament, and expressed great Hopes of his own Salvation, and blessed God, that he had been to hear the best Sermons twice every Sunday for many Years together, the Clergyman asked him, upon this Occasion, some easy Questions; as particularly, what the Bread...
